AMERICAN FIRST TO GO OVER THE TOP

NAVY AVIATOR BYRD'S FEAT THRILLS AIRPLANE PEOPLE

What Took Perry 8 Months To Accomplish Was Done By Lieutenant Commander Byrd In Less than a Day—Entire Population of Kings Bay, Island of Spitzbergen, Turns Out To Greet the Returning Hero—News Received With Amazement In Navy and Army Circles At Washington.

Lieutenant Commander Richard E. Byrd, U. S. navy aviator, flew over the North Pole Sunday, the New York Times and the St. Louis Post-Dispatch announced.

Commanded Byrd, first to accomplish this feat, made the flight in 15 hours and 30 minutes, leaving his base at Kings Bay, Spitzbergen, at 12:50 o'clock Sunday morning (Greenwich time) returning safely at 4:20 o'clock Sunday afternoon.

Commander Byrd, in flying to the North Pole demonstrated that wings could do in less than a day what Admiral Peary, discoverer of the North Pole, consumed eight months in negotiating by dog sled. This also made Byrd's the first of nine expeditions attempting the feat to reach the North Pole this year.

His giant three-motored airplane carried him safely over wastes which Amundsen last year pronounced unsafe for airplane fliers and the distance traveled, roughly 1600 miles, was equal to more than a month's musing in the Arctic under the most ideal conditions for dog teams.

The flight and return of Commander Byrd, recounted by wireless, were far different both in the act and the transmission of news from the departure of Admiral Robert E. Peary from Sydney, N. S., July 7, 1908.

Peary hardly had cleared the harbor and was just beginning to fight some of the worst of the Atlantic ocean's storms in the little schooner Roosevelt in the time Byrd went to and returned from the pole.

The report that Byrd, who last year accompanied McMillan into the north, actually had reached the pole before returning to his base was received with amazement, as the announced plans for his first flight called only for negotiating the 400 miles to Pearyland and return, a total of 800 miles.

This in itself was considered a daring feat because of the paucity of landing places on the jagged Arctic ice plains, but the flight of at least 1600 miles involved in a round trip hop to the pole rivalled the most optimistic hopes of observers of this flight.

In four months after setting out, Peary had only reached Etah, Greenland, and there still remained a dash of hundreds of miles to the pole.

During the following months, until June of 1909, no word was received concerning Peary, except here and there a multitude of rumors.

Captain Roald Amundsen, who last year failed to reach the Pole with two airplanes, in 1913 made an unsuccessful attempt to reach the Pole by schooner and dog sled, but in a small schooner negotiated the northernmost shore of the American continent.

When Amundsen dashed into the North last year, however, he and Lincoln Ellsworth, backer and partner in the expedition, ended by experiencing both the thrill of flight into the North and the troubles of ice travel.

With their planes stuck fast in the ice, they were out of touch with their base for four weeks while they laboriously trekked back, finally encountering a fishing boat which returned them to the same base as the one for the successful hop Sunday.

The first attempts to reach the Pole

were made exclusively with ships, explorers being afraid to venture from this protection onto the snow. John Ross, an Englishman, was the first to adopt the sled, when, in 1818, he made an attempt foredoomed to failure, pulling his sled behind him.

McClintock in 1857 inaugurated the use of dogs and some years later the light sled was developed. Then for more than half a century the means of transportation in the Arctic circle remained stationary. The next step was the airplane.

Hundreds of men since have ventured in the region mapping it, searching for new, some times fabulous lands, while others have gone purely for the love of adventure. Many have paid with their lives.

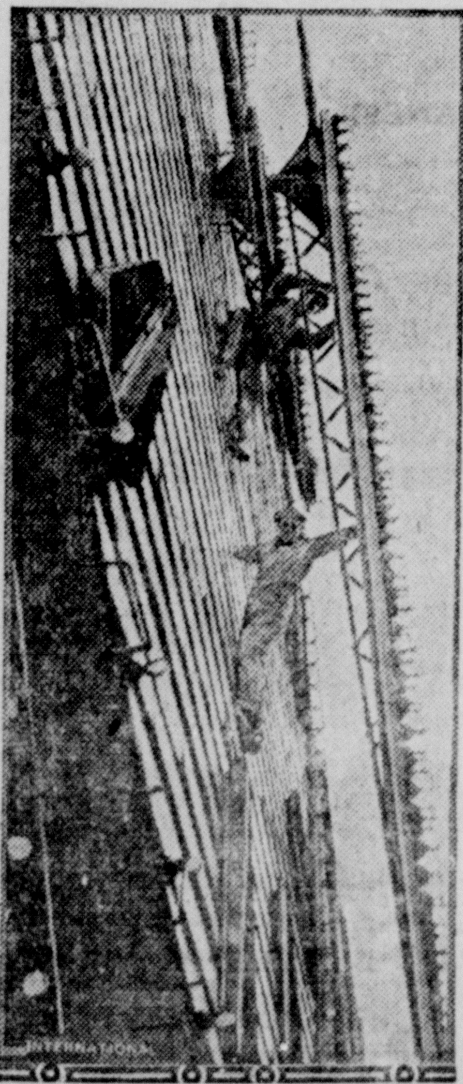

The skeletons of four men found on Herald Island in 1924, formed the grim record of a detachment of Stefansson's exploration party lost ten years before.

Rasmussen, who went by dog sled into the Arctic regions, traveled 20,000 miles before he emerged at Seattle in 1924, and with him he brought the first records to prove that Eskimos all speak the same language.

ONE KILLED, TWO HURT.

Wheeling, W. Va. May 10, (UP)—George L. Wolff, 79, formerly of Pomeroy, Ohio, was killed at Warwood, near here, when he made a valiant attempt to save his grandson from being ground to death beneath the wheel of a train. The child was saved by a government dam employee, who also made an unsuccessful effort to pull Wolff from the path of the train.

WITHDRAWAL OF AKRON MAN RAISES QUERY

Wiseacres Believe That Thad H. Brown Will be Gainer by Knight's Action.

It seems to be the consensus of opinion among politicians that the withdrawal of former Congressman Charles L. Knight from the contest for the Republican nomination for governor will benefit Colonel Thad H. Brown more than any other candidate. Knight did not attempt to bequeath his support to Brown or any other candidate; in fact, he did not assume to have any support that was his to transfer as he saw fit. Manifestly, the Republicans who intended to support Knight for the nomination will use their own judgment in selecting a candidate to take his place.

Colonel Brown has maintained friendly relations with all the rival candidates for the honor, and this has left him prepared to take advantage of such retirements from the contest as those of Colonel Carmi A. Thompson and Knight. For this reason, and this only, it is expected that there will be a general transfer of allegiance from the standard of the retired Knight to that of the secretary of state.

It will be interesting to note the attitude of the Republican leaders of Hamilton county since Knight is out of the running. The Times-Star, which is to say, Charles P. Taft, led off in boosting Knight's candidacy several months ago—going the limit, and much farther than was its custom—in urging his candidacy. This came as a decided surprise since no action regarding the nomination for governor had been taken by the party organization of Hamilton county, and it was suspected that the sentiment of the organization leader, Hynica, because of severe castigation at the hands of Knight, would not be favorable to him.

No pronouncement from the Hamilton county organization had been made when Knight announced his retirement from the primary contest. It was known, however, that Hynica was not personally favorable to the candidacy of Knight and yet he was not convinced that the Cincinnati candidate, Mr. Cooper, would give hope of success to the party. This, because as he put it, Mr. Cooper was too dry for Cincinnati, and if he should come before the people as the candidate of the Hamilton county organization, he would be looked upon askance by the party in other parts of the state—even among those who approved in Mr. Cooper the very things that weakened him with his own neighbors.

The question now is, what will the attitude of the Cincinnati organization be? Will the Times-Star still withhold support from Mr. Cooper? Will the organization go into the primary campaign without a favored candidate? Will it give a prefatory endorsement to Cooper, or will it cut loose and endorse a candidate who more nearly meets the requirements.—Columbus Dispatch.

JENKINS BILL PASSED SENATE IS NOW A LAW

Will Insure the Continuation of the C. & O. Railroad Thru Circleville.

The United States senate on April 26, passed house resolution 7470 which is a bill introduced by Congressman Jenkins, of Ohio, authorizing the war department to enter into negotiations with the New York, Chicago and St. Louis Railroad company for a right of way thru the government land at Camp Sherman. The bill was signed by President Coolidge Thursday.

The passage of this bill will insure the continuation of the C. & O. Northern from Waverly to Columbus. It is understood that the work of constructing this railroad has been held up pending the passage of this bill. The C. & O. Northern has heretofore been using the tracks of the N. & W. railroad to Columbus, but the great increase of traffic on both of these roads has become so heavy that the construction of a new line is necessary.

It is understood that this construction work will start immediately as rights of way have been tentatively procured for the greater proportion of this proposed route. This construction will probably mean an expenditure of several million dollars in the Scioto Valley territory and will put another railroad line on the tax duplicate in Ohio. This road will give the C. & O. a direct line into Columbus and will, no doubt, tend to increase the railroad business at Russell, Kentucky, which already has one of the largest railroad yards in the world.

VICTIM OF HANGING

Is Believed To Be Long Missing Man.

Cadiz, May 7.—An unidentified man found hanging from a tree in a dense woods on the Samuel Dunlap farm near Cassville, yesterday, may be Clark C. Baker, missing Mansfield dance hall proprietor.

The man had killed himself. He had thrown a piece of window cord over a limb and stepped off a stone. His toes were touching the ground when the body was found by Francis Dunlap, aged 10. The Dunlaps said they last saw the man walking along the road by their farm April 27.

The man's handkerchief found in his coat pocket bore either the initials "C. C. B." or "C. C. S.," the last letter being indistinct. His description tallies with that of Baker, according to a comparison made at Mansfield.

No one remembers seeing the man around the neighborhood before. It is not believed he was here for any length of time.

PICKAWAY COUNTY

Joined State Movement In Relief of Crippled Children.

Pickaway County, joining with the rest of the state, is making an attempt to give more than twelve thousand crippled children a real chance in life.

School enumerators now are taking the annual census of all school children in the state. They also want the names and addresses of all crippled children between the ages of one and twenty-one years.

It has been demonstrated that many of these children can be helped. Often crooked arms and legs can be straightened and the child can be made to run and play like other children. Special education also makes it possible for them to grow up into useful men and women who make their own way in life.

Ohio has means by which these children can be helped whether their parents are able to pay the cost of treatment and education or not. But it is necessary that they be found before aid can be given.

A Friend from the South Seas

Once before the South Seas became popularized through modern fiction and drama, their islands were making a valuable contribution to the American table. For the pineapple is grown in almost every tropical and semi-tropical country, and in Hawaii, in particular, where it is canned in great quantities and sent to the United States.

Very little raw pineapple is shipped, because, when fully ripe, it cannot be transported any great distance without damage, and when plucked before maturity, it lacks flavor. But doubtless the chief reason is the convenience of the canned product, since the raw pineapple is the hardest of all fruits to prepare for the table.

The food value of the pineapple lies in its vitamin, mineral and sugar content. Its refreshing flavor is incomparable. Physicians recommend it highly for the throat. For the table it is used as a fruit, as a salad (either shredded or sliced), in fritters, as a filling for pie, cake or sandwiches, in puddings, ice cream and sherbet. It even adds a fine flavor to a slice of ham, when used as follows:

Scar quickly in frying-pan a thick slice of ham. Put into casserole and sprinkle with 1 tablespoon sugar and 1/4 t. noon. Bake in oven until brown. Mix 2 t. brown sugar with a little cold water and add various spices. Remove ham and add flour mixture to gravy. Return ham to dish, garnish with pineapple.

She is Daisy Hilton, one of the famous Texas Twins. She and her sister Violet have been joined together since birth at the base of the spine. Because Daisy is the right hand twin, she has always had to sit in the passenger's seat while Violet piloted the car. But in a recent visit to California the Howard Automobile Company, Buick distributors, solved the problem. The Buick used by the Twins has double control, and is used to teach new drivers how to handle a car. Violet is seen giving Daisy her first lesson in driving at the wheels of the double control Buick. These charming young girls are high school graduates, talented musicians and accomplished entertainers.

HARTMAN THEATER.

"Under Cover," a mystery drama by Roi Cooper Meigrue, author of the well known farce, "It Pays to Advertise," has been chosen as this week's offering by the Hartman Stock company under the direction of John Hayden. "Under Cover" enjoyed a long run when it was first produced in the Cort theater, New York, with William Courtenay in the leading role.

It has action aplenty, with thrill after thrill until the final curtain. Primarily the story has to do with the U. S. custom officers attempt to run down certain expert diamond smugglers. Amy Cartwright has foolishly sold her sister Ethel's diamonds to satisfy a gambling debt, and has collected their value from a burglary insurance company. With this information in his power, Daniel Taylor, a deputy in the customs, force the refined and innocent Ethel, against her inclination, to enter the custom service as a spy to "get the goods" on Steven Denby, a young society man whom she has met in Paris and fallen in love with, but who in reality has smuggled a valuable pearl necklace on his recent return from Europe.

The plot from then on has many astonishing twists and turns and it is not until the final curtain that the denouement comes and the entire plot unravels. Steven Denby is to be played by the popular leading man, Donn Cook, and his performance of this role promises to be a real delight. Jean Ford will play the part of Ethel, and others of the company will be in the supporting cast. "Under Cover" looks like a real thriller. Don't miss it!

Don't forget that dancing in the foyer to Allen Hale's orchestra starts thirty minutes before the play, during intermission and after each matinee, plays thirty minutes longer.

Matinees Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays.

LOANS UP TO $500.00.

At a public auction you buy an article at your own bid; and pay for it either in cash, at a small cash discount, or with a bankable note for the exact amount of your bid. There is never anything added into the fact of the note for a carrying charge—such a thing would not be tolerated.

Adding the carrying charge to the cost of any thing you buy is simply a "clever way of covering up excessive interest charges. And the rate you pay runs as high as 200 per cent depending entirely on the character of the firm you deal with.

You can avoid interest risks by borrowing money under the popular City Loan system. Here the interest accrues from day to day thruout the life of the loan, figured on a constantly diminishing balance. With City Loan money you can get the benefit of cash dealing, and pay moderate interest with the difference.

THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK

CIRCLEVILLE, OHIO

"The Bank That Makes You Feel At Home."

Canada To Honor An Ohioan.

The Dominion government is being urged to erect a monument to a native son of Ohio—Tecumseh, the Indian chief who was born near where Springfield now stands, in 1768. He was a valuable ally to the British in the War of 1812 and lost his life in the decisive land battle of that war on the Thames river, western Ontario, but his services have never been commemorated in spite of the fact that the Canadians have inherited the British penchant for so preserving the memory of their leaders—especially those who serve in their country's military or naval defenses.

The Toronto Globe in an editorial recently entitled "Remember Tecumseh," said: "His name is perpetuated in parks, hotels and other practical affairs, but the country which owes so much to his bravery and sagacity, has failed to erect something worthy, lasting and beautiful. Brantford has a statue of Joseph Brant, another Indian ally, but the chief who threw his forces behind Brock and the British in 1812 has been passed over."

It is suggested that the fact that the exact spot of the burial of Tecumseh is not known may have something to do with the delay in rendering merited honor to this old chief, but the Globe suggests that any spot on the site of the battle in which he was killed would be appropriate, in view of the fact that it now seems improbable that his exact burial place will ever be ascertained.

The Globe takes occasion while praising Tecumseh for his conduct at the Thames to criticize Proctor, the British commander, saying: "Proctor ran off and Tecumseh went along to help as he could. He died with his face to the foe while the general he derided was safely back of the lines and escaped to Ancestor after the defeat." Tecumseh is quoted as saying to Proctor at this turn of affairs: "We must compare our father's conduct to a fat dog that carries its tail on its back, but when affrighted drops it between its legs and runs off." It has been said that R. M. Johnson, who was vice president of the United States from 1837 to 1841, fired the shot that killed Tecumseh, but he himself did not claim to be certain of it. He fired at close range at an Indian that looked like him.—J. H. Galbraith in Columbus Dispatch.

THE SHIPPING BOARD'S VISIONS

The Shipping Board has just applied to Congress for an allowance of $15,000,000 to finance a line of eight ships between New York and Hamburg. The navy needs a merchant marine as material for conversion into transports in case of war. Granted. But so far as daily business is concerned, that is an academic argument. It need not be confused with the Fourth of July thesis that the American flag should be familiar on every sea, regardless of cost. Nevertheless, if the Shipping Board's business were frankly put before the public as the navy's business and its activities made to conform to the navy's practical needs, the public might be induced to take a much more sympathetic interest.—New York Telegram.

AERIAL AMBULANCE FOUND OF VALUE

The aerial ambulance for the sick and wounded has made great progress in Sweden. There are vast districts in that country with comparatively large populations which are totally deprived of means of locomotion during part of the year. In winter the roads are obstructed by snowdrifts, and in summer many villages may be isolated by floods caused by the melting snows. In these circumstances it was decided to make a trial of aerial transport, and the government in 1923 agreed to share the expense of purchase of an airplane with the Swedish Red Cross.

A Breguet biplane was chosen, with a 300-horse power, 12-cylinder, water-cooled Renault engine, capable of carrying two stretcher cases with one attendant. Wheels were impracticable and were replaced by skis, and a pair of floats were added to facilitate landing on water. Military airmen piloted the machine and the service began in December, 1924.

During the winter 11 patients were transported. One patient, suffering from hemorrhage and living in a very isolated district, was transferred to Boden in an hour and a half, whereas the journey by sledge would have taken 20 hours, thus gaining many valuable hours.

The Guillotine

It is 112 years since the death of Dr. Ignatius Joseph Guillotine, who invented the instrument for beheading persons at one stroke, causing instant and painless death.

It was adopted by the French assembly in 1792, and within a month set up. The first person executed by it was a highway robber named Pelletier. The first political victim was Dantremont, who was executed in August, 1792.

FORD ENGINE ENDURES TEST OF LONG RUN

Seventeen Days Under Heavy Pressure and Constant Adverse Conditions.

In the course of a test in Detroit recently for a certain steel formula for use in the engine the Ford Motor company developed some interesting data along another line. The engine under test was run with wide open throttle and three times normal load, the equivalent of a non-stop endurance run half way around the world.

With the exception of one part, which was experimental, the engine was stock. The object of the test was to wear out the experimental part, and conditions were made difficult in order to get an early result. Cooling was purposely retarded, so that the radiator at all times registered a boiling temperature and the exhaust pipes were constantly red hot.

The test endured seventeen days, while engineers waited for the engine to fail. Adverse conditions were constant; oil was changed while the motor was running; speed was unvaried from thirty-six miles per hour and the overload was constant. At the end of 412 hours the engine was stopped and taken down.

Examination showed that the experimental part had been burned by the intense heat. But, aside from this, the engine was practically unaffected by the test and apparently ready to repeat it.

During the test the engine ran the equivalent of 14,382 miles, consuming 795 gallons of gasoline—an average of 18 1/2 miles to the gallon, in spite of overload and excessive heat. Each piston moved up and down in its cylinder approximately 37,080,000 times and the crankshaft made an equal number of complete revolutions.

MRS. CAPPER PASSED AWAY IN HOSPITAL

Baltimore, Md., May 10, (UP)—Mrs. Arthur Capper, wife of U. S. Senator Capper, of Kansas, died early today at the hospital for the Women of Maryland.

Mrs. Capper five weeks ago underwent a major operation. For a while her condition improved, but several days ago a change occurred and it was apparent she would not survive.

Senator Capper, who had engaged a room at the hospital with other members of her family, was at her bedside at the end.

The body will be shipped to Topeka, Kansas, leaving Baltimore at 6:05 p. m., on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad. Accompanying the remains will be Senator Capper, Mrs. George M. Crawford, her sister-in-law, and Mrs. Crawford's two children, Mrs. Isabella Paxton and Marshall Crawford.

CINCINNATIAN IS MENTIONED FOR GOVERNOR

Robert Taft Declines to be Candidate and Judge Cushing is Considered.

New names were brought into the Republican governorship situation, as suggestions that had been advanced were abandoned.

Representative Robert A. Taft, of Hamilton county, followed Judge Harvey C. Smith, of Columbus, and Judge George H. Clark, of Canton, in refusing to become the choice of the group that backed Charles L. Knight, of Akron.

The most prominent name to appear in the arena was that of Judge Wade Cushing, of Cincinnati, whose friends importuned him to enter the contest. Judge Cushing was indifferent to the suggestions and doubt was expressed whether or not he would take the proffered support.

The other new name projected into the field was that of Joseph T. Tracy, Portsmouth, auditor of the state of Ohio. Since Tracy observed how A. V. Donahey crossed from the northwestern quarter of the Capitol he, too, has itched to essay the leap.

In a statement issued from his office it was stated that "recent political developments have caused numerous inquiries at the office relative to the possible candidacy of Mr. Tracy for governor. Continuing, the communique said that Mr. Tracy was absent from the city. It concluded:

"In a long distance telephone communication, however, he was told of the keen interest with which his decision is awaited. He advised that he was giving the matter consideration and would declare his intention as soon as possible after his return from Washington."

The legion which is striving for the Republican nomination for lieutenant governor was augmented by the addition of Isaac Lewis, of Canton, member of a family of former labor leaders. It was said that Lewis may run on the popularity of Lieutenant Governor Charles H. Lewis, who ran away with the prize two years ago.

The only contribution to the Democratic factional affairs was a letter made public Thursday by A. P. Sandles, of Ottawa, continuing the policy of nagging and "ragging" the present administration. Fault is found with the use of Ohio State Reformatory prisoners from Mansfield as attendants. Complaint was lodged with the Ohio League of Women Voters. Sandles suggested the league adopt a resolution asking that civilians replace the prisoners.

SOBER SLEEP THE DEEPEST IS THE CLAIM

Recording Machine Used in Experiment Broken by an Intoxicated Subject.

The eight hours of sleep which the human being allows to himself each night is a series of eleven-minute catnaps, psychologists were told by Professor Johnson, of the Mellon Institute, Pittsburgh. He presented findings of experiments made with sleeping persons whose rest was recorded by apparatus attached to a hanging bed on which the subjects slumbered.

The average rest period of the subjects was 11 1/2 minutes. After that length of time the sleeper fidgeted, rolled over, changed his position and relaxed for 11 1/2 minutes more.

An intoxicated man put to bed in the experimental divan tossed about so vigorously that he fractured the recording device, but after four hours he grew quieter and slept with reasonable normality. There is apparently no foundation, the experiments indicated, for the belief that intoxication produces a deeper, quieter sleep than normal slumber.

The psychologists, representing midwestern universities also had dissected for them psychologically the factors in the success of "Red" Grange at half back.

C. R. Griffith, of the psychology department of the University of Illinois reviewed experiments with athletes at the university, which proved, he said that no small part of athletic prowess was within the mind. Psychological treatment he declared, enabled men to build up muscular processes which they could not be coached to achieve.

Analysis of Grange's prowess as an open field runner in football revealed Griffith related, that the galloping ghost of the gridiron never ran for an opening. He has an unusual knack of envisioning the whole field rather than the immediate possibilities of gain, and he saw his opening in the process of creation rather than dashing madly for a hole which would be plugged by the time he hit it.

OHIO FARMERS PROTECTED IN BUYING SEEDS

New Law Provides For the Staining of Imported Clover and Alfalfa.

Farmers of Ohio will soon be able to buy clover and alfalfa seed and feel fairly sure they are getting good seed that will grow. This is brought about by the passage of the Gooding-Ketchum seed bill which was signed by the president last week.

For many years, Ohio farm leaders say, clover and alfalfa seed has been brought into this country from Europe which is unadapted and will not grow under climatic conditions here. Large quantities of this seed have been mixed with home grown stocks so that the yield of apparently adapted seed has been cut materially.

The bill as finally passed, provides that all imported alfalfa and red clover seeds must be dyed a distinctive color to show point of origin in such manner and to such extent as the secretary of agriculture may prescribe. The bill, which was backed by farm bureaus, granges and crop experts, becomes law in thirty days.

Few farmers realize what a large amount of seed is affected by the new law. Figures secured by the Ohio Farm Bureau federation show that during the first fifteen days of this year only 3,144,000 pounds of red clover seed, most of it unadapted to Ohio use, was imported. During December, 1925, importations totalled 4,400,000 pounds.

Staining of the weed, backers of the bill believe, will prevent mixing of home grown and adapted seed with cheaper imported stocks which do not give satisfactory results in the northern part of this country.

Palestine's Big Fair

The mid-east fair, held with much success in the city of Tel Aviv, Palestine, last year, was reopened in Tel Aviv by the British high commissioner on March 26, 1926. The newly-established Palestine Industries are reported to be making an effort to have their goods well represented and, according to local reports, special interest is being shown in the fact that the first pianos manufactured in Palestine are exhibited.

AMUSEMENTS

Tom Meighan's a New York traffic cop at the Met theater in the Paramount picture, "Irish Luck," a screen version of the Saturday Evening Post story, "An Imperfect Impostor," by Norman Venner.

The story is an unusually pleasing romantic drama laid against a background of modern Dublin, the Lakes of Killarney and New York City, with several eye-filling shots taken aboard the S. S. Leviathan.

As Tom Donahue, New York policeman, the star wins a trip to Europe in a newspaper popularity contest. Aboard ship on the way over he is mistaken for a young Irish nobleman by a young man and woman. When they discover their error they stick around, nevertheless, and finally fleece Tom out of his prize money.

He lands in Dublin with only a dollar between him and starvation, catches a glimpse of the two crooks and trails them to the race track where a "bookie" again takes him for Lord Fitzhugh, places the nobleman's usual bet on his favorite horse for him and Tom departs with 5,000 pounds won in Fitzhugh's name. He looks up the other man (also played by Meighan) to tell him about the case of mistaken identity, is cordially received and invited to spend the night at Fitzhugh's apartment.

In the morning he is awakened by a beautiful young woman, Lady Gwendolyn (Miss Wilson) who mistakes him at first for her brother, Lord Fitzhugh. The girl has come to bring her brother to the bedside of their uncle who wants to see his nephew again, wipe out an old estrangement and remember him in his will. During the night Fitzhugh has been abducted by a gang of conspirators and is held prisoner in a lonely cottage. It is Tom Donahue, traffic cop, that Lady Gwendolyn brings to her uncle.

Douglas, another nephew, has bribed the conspirators with an offer of 1,000 pounds to murder Fitzhugh, and the deed is planned for the night when the will is to be read on the castle. He also plans to arrest Tom, as soon as he signs the papers, as a forger and an impostor.

But the New York cop has a trick or two up his sleeve. He crawls thru the window of the cottage, sends the real Fitzhugh back to the castle to deal with Douglas, and when the conspirators come to murder him, he shows how a New York policeman fights when his back is against the wall.

If you think you'd like Tom Meighan in the land of romance and chivalry, enacting the role of a real red blooded, two fisted Irish-American here, don't miss Irish Luck." Victor Heerman directed. Tom Geraghty wrote the scenario.

Black Satin Is Used for This Spring Suit

This smart suit for the cool spring days is of black satin, with a high collar and a jabot of ecru lace. The hat is of black felt, with a band of red and a crystal ornament at the side.

Chic of Simplicity IsFound in Chiffon Garb

Those who have spent the winter months at the smart Florida resorts with one accord give precedence to the simple little frock of chiffon for informal evening wear. This frock is of such utter simplicity of line that it would be almost naive were it not for the skill and cleverness with which an intricate manipulation of fabric produces an effect of youthful and charming grace.

For all their simplicity, however, it takes a person of distinction and a certain amount of sophistication to wear them. There is a trick in achieving simplicity that only those initiated in all the varying ways of fashion can accomplish with any degree of success. Once achieved, nothing gives the effect of greater chic, which perhaps is the reason that year after year the great designers and those who interpret their modes to the world at large practice as well as preach the gospel of simplicity.

An outstanding phase in connection with the simple chiffon evening frock is the use of delicate flowerlike colorings in contrast to the vivid shades of other seasons.

Printed Silk for Coat,Plain Fabric for Dress

So beautiful are the new silks and in many ways so different in design and colorings from the materials of other years, that it is not surprising to find them put to uses never thought of heretofore.

In the ensemble of other seasons when a plain and patterned silk were combined, the figured material appeared as a lining of the coat which matched the frock. This year one finds this order reversed. Printed silks now fashion the coat itself and a plain-surfaced fabric is chosen for the dress. The result is very effective and amazingly chic.

The most strikingly individual of the new silks reflect a feeling for elusive tones on the order of pastel shades, but even more subdued and delicate in tone, and the same feeling for delicacy and unobtrusive charm is evident in the designs, many of which are floral in effect but much conventionalized.

Colors in Demand forNew Shoes and Hosiery

Fashion dictators are at variance when it comes to stockings. Shall the dark or light colors be proclaimed as fashionable is the question. In the meantime each woman seems to be settling the question for herself.

In the shops they say there is a tremendous demand for shoes in black, mauve, taupe and cannon shades. Those in gunmetal with black heels are also great favorites. On the other hand, there is no end to the light colors. New tones are continually appearing, and the moonlight, woodland rose, nude, the antelope series and all the others, too numerous to mention, are very much in demand.

With the colors that are appearing in the new shoes and the desire of good dressers that the footwear match or harmonize with the costume, it is fortunate there is such a wide range of colors to select from.

Black and Brilliants

Black for evening is the latest word from Paris and black chiffon dance frocks are worn by the smartest women. One frock is covered with glittering brilliants so attached as to give the effect of a pattern. There is no other decoration.

Never Before

A speeding motorist had been hauled up before a southern Indiana justice of the peace. The motorist evidently thought it was a trumped-up charge with a fine as the reward for the local department of justice, and his conduct before the justice bore this out.

"Were you ever in a court of justice before?" the squire asked him, to impress him with the gravity of his situation.

"No, never," was the retort, "but I've been before a justice of the peace before."

A Nude Horse

Dorothy and Sally, age five and three, were visiting their grandparents in a southern Indiana town. One morning they had been out playing when they suddenly burst into the house very much excited and frightened. Being asked the reason for their hurried entrance, Dorothy gasped out: "Oh, there was a horse went running down the street and nobody was with it. And it didn't have a thing on, not even a strap—nothing but just its skin and its tail."

MOTHERS' DAY ADDRESS BY SECRETARY OF LABOR DAVIS

A Mother Is the "Holiest Thing Alive" and Her Heart "Outweighs the Universe"—Our Indebtedness To Woman Is Too Large For Measurement By Means of Any Conventional Yardstick or Scales—Makes Vigorous Defense of the Girls of Today and Says They Will Give a Good Account of Themselves.

The following address was delivered Sunday afternoon in Arlington cemetery, Washington D. C., by Secretary of Labor James J. Davis, and under the auspices of the American War Mothers' association:

There is an ancient Oriental proverb which tells us that the heart of a mother outweighs the universe. It does. As I stand here today in Arlington cemetery, on ground sacred to the memory of our honored dead, there comes to my mind the words which you will find in the ninth verse of the thirty-seventh chapter of the book of Ezekiel: "Thus saith the Lord God; come from the four winds, O, breath, and breathe upon these slain, that they may live." That breath has come; it has caressed all these heroes born of woman, nurtured by a mother's love and inspired by the ideal of a heart that outweighs the universe. They live again in our minds and hearts and in the strength of our nation.

The spiritual always dominates in the long years the mind of man. Love is as all-embracing as the sea. One of the greatest poets has said that it is love that moves the sun and all the stars; we know that it is love that moves our human world. And the heart of a mother is love in its purest form.

I am not speaking in terms of sentiment only. Henry Drummond pointed out more than thirty years ago that every living thing in the world, vegetable no less than animal, came in response to love, and he depicted man as living on the fruits of love when he consumed his corn and wine. The ancient civilizations of Greece and Rome thought of the earth as a mother who brought all forms of life into existence, and it was a beautiful and poetic thought.

What the world owes to woman, and especially to woman as mother, would require more than a brief address to tell. It would need many large volumes. We used to hear it said that this is a man's world, and if one had been compelled to believe all the intellectual folly that poured like a flood from the lips and pens of persons who were not otherwise, the inference would have been that woman had no slight a share in the affairs of destiny as to be quite negligible. There are still some who continue to talk and write in that strain, but their number is growing beautifully less, and we may hope that in a not distant day the tribe will be extinct. The truth is that our indebtedness to woman is too large for measurement by means of any conventional yardstick or scales. We know now that women were the first tillers of the soil. In the twilight period of human history, while the men of the tribe went forth to war, or to hunt and fish, women sowed the seeds that were to ripen into grain. They nurtured the children; they did all the labor that their men regarded as menial and beneath their dignity. They inspired the warrior to battle with his foes, and they cared for him tenderly if he returned maimed from the conflict. Those who speak so scornfully of woman's activities in the past would do well to remember that if woman had not consented to go down into the valley of the shadow of death, if necessary, to produce offspring, there would have been no human history at all. There would not even have been one man to sit in the seats of the scornful, able to tell his mother that, in comparison with him, she was of very slight account.

There is in the world nothing finer than the spirit of heroism; and there is not a man on earth who does not owe every atom of heroism that he may possess to the woman who bore him. No matter what physical or moral courage he may have displayed, or may later display, he has inherited that spiritual wealth from a woman who dared to risk her life that he might be brought into the world. Even more than this can be said. Those who affect to despise the work of women, those who say that the e has never been a great feminine mind in the ranks of science, philosophy or polite literature should bear in mind that, even if they were right, it would still be true that every great masculine scientist, thinker and writer has been a man whose greatness was very largely the unearned endowment he received from his mother. So true is this that the great Goethe was forced to exclaim, "There is something feminine in all genius," and a famous French novelist declared that he had found that all great writers had more of their mothers than of their fathers in them. Things are not always what they seem to be on the surface, and, as we are beginning to learn, the nature of man is one of those things in which reality and appearance conflict. The best in any man is what he has derived from his mother. And the greater the man, the more indebted to his mother he is always found to have been, when the biographer and the historian come to appraise him.

We must reverence our mothers, if we would be worthy citizens of the Republic and of the world. In the man who does not reverence his mother, one will find few virtues. There was once a philosopher who startled the world with his philosophy of pessimism. He taught that the best thing that a man could do was to crush his will to live. He must come to perceive that it is better not to be than to be. The universe he admitted, was beautiful to look at, but he declared that it was dreadful in reality. Women he thought dreadful creatures, without appreciation of the nobler things of existence. Well, after this pessimistic philosopher had gone the way of all the earth, and his books were in all the libraries, and many thousand students had read him, the scholars began to dig into his record, and they discovered that all his pessimism and hatred of women had been preceded by a terrible quarrel with his mother which had soured his nature. Is not the moral obvious?

Coleridge has said that
"—to be wroth with one we love
Doth work like madness in brain."

When a man has ceased to reverence his mother he loses, as this sad tale reveals, all his inspiration in life, and his work becomes in the end only an ash left by the dying embers of the brain.

Doubtless there is little danger of Americans ever becoming contaminated by a philosophy of pessimism, or of losing their reverence either for their own mothers, or for that spirit which worships the Eternal Mother. Americans know the past. They are not likely to forget their history. They are aware that from the time of the earliest American settlements, thru all the years of stress and storm, down to the present hour when America is universally recognized as the richest and most powerful nation in the world, the American mother has shared with the American father all the burden and heat of the days. Her burden, indeed, has often been greater than his. For if the American father has worked hard, his wife has worked even harder. American mothers, as well as other mothers, have known the sting in these lines that tell us:

"Men work from morn till set of sun,
But women's work is ne ver done."

But we Americans are entitled to do a little boasting here, for they have been engaged in lightening the burdens of all mothers, that they might have leisure hours for their children, culture, and for the enjoyment of all the good things of life. When Howe invented the sewing machine, he inaugurated a mechanical revolution in household economies that has been in a state of progression ever since his day. We now have the gas heater and electric heater the electric washing machine, the electric flatiron and the vacuum cleaner, all designed to lighten women's burden, and tho there are still many who have them not, we look forward to the day when these labor saving devices will have been introduced into every household.

Americans believe in these labor saving devices, as their statutes, national and state, attest, because they are anxious that children shall be born and nurtured under the best conditions, and they have learned that the influence of the American mother is needed in the larger affairs of life, such as politics. For generations it was known that governmental affairs needed the father; our generation has learned that the mother is no less essential. The mother can supply the heart—the heart which the proverb says outweighs the universe—in meeting those problems that involve children, those in want, and those whose sick minds predispose them to a life of crime, and the heart is likely to accomplish more in these directions during the future than the head of man has been able to accomplish for a period of ten thousand years.

Those who opposed woman suffrage most bitterly only a few years ago are now often the loudest in their praise of what women have already done in the affairs of state; and we may be certain that this praise will swell in volume as the years and the centuries roll on.

There are heard at present, however, pessimistic voices which agree with all that has been said in regard to the motherhood of the past, but are gloom incarnate when they speak of the future. They tell us that we have entered into what they call an Age of Jazz; of the flapper they speak only in terms of reproach, or even horror. They do not admit that the flapper is the equivalent of the young woman of the past, and they depict her as shunning the responsibilities of marriage, as throwing all decorum to the winds and treading the various primrose paths that lead to individual and national disaster. Is there any truth in this pessimism?

My opinion is that the amount is not great. From time immemorial such complaints have ascended to the welkin. The old have always tended to be skeptical of the young. They have always been heard declaring that times are not what they used to be. "They never were," replies the wit. The truth is that nature is always much wiser than any grumbling pessimist or calamity howler, for nature is very old. A few years ago our pessimists saw all things blue, because women had shortened their skirts. They wanted women to be like their grandmothers and great-grandmothers of the early nineteenth century. Their wailing led some enterprising woman to study the fashions of that period, and lo! it was discovered that the short skirt of this day was exactly the kind of skirt that the extolled women of that period wore.

There is nothing wrong with the girls of today. Of course, some of them are quite frivolous. But there have been flappers for the past ten thousand years of whom the same thing might have been said, and indeed was said. If you have any doubt as to that, read the oldest literature of the world, and your doubt will be laid to rest.

Edmund Burke begged his generation to bear in mind that because half a dozen grasshoppers under a fern made a field to ring with their chink, it did not follow that they were the only inhabitants of the field, for in that same field thousands of cattle chewed their cud silently in the shadow of the British oak. Thus might we speak of our noisy flappers, in comparison with the whole. They are few in number. The overwhelming majority of them are quite as sedate as were their mothers at the same age. Nor should it be assumed too hastily that the flappers whose escapades enliven the press columns are destined necessarily to shoot Niagara. Most of these will give a good account of themselves when the time arrives for them to take their places among the matrons. You must allow something for the spirit of youth.

We are living, all things considered, in the grandest age that America has known. People speak of juvenile delinquency, but the latest available statistics indicate that this delinquency is decreasing rather than increasing. All the evils from which we suffer are very old, but human nature is not going backward, but forward. All the gains of the past will be conserved, and the future will reach many goals that now are only to vision known. Let us learn to have faith in our country and mankind; above all, let us continue to have that faith in woman and motherhood that has always been one of our most cherished possessions.

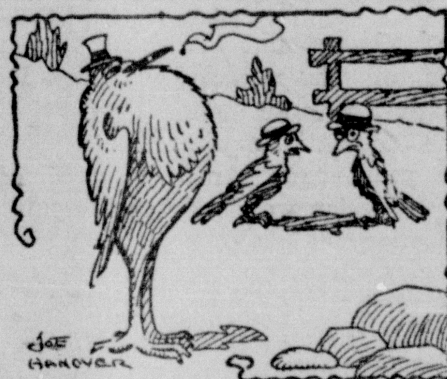

These are a few of the thoughts that I would leave in your minds on this day, wisely dedicated to the memory of our mothers. I bear in mind my own, and shall never forget what she has meant in my life. I can still see her back in the old home doing uncomplainingly all the necessary drudgery of the household, and yet never failing in the tender care of her children. I can see her as she held the lamp for me in the darkness of the night when my youthful feet wended their way to the work of the mill.

I recall all her acts of kindness, her wise admonitions, and her never-failing faith in days that were well adapted to try the soul. Do I need with such a mother, to tell you why this day means so much to me? She is still alive, and I have sent her these lines which I picked up in a shop:

"This day by many set apart
In honor of the mother heart,—
I love the custom, for you see

The best of mothers God gave me."
I believe with all my heart and soul that Coleridge spoke only sober truth when he said that a mother is "the holiest thing alive." That has been my experience, and I believe that it has been the experience of all men who have tried to do their duty. Men often ask one another, "What would you wish to have said of you in the end?" I have but one answer. I would like to have it said of me that I lived as my mother wanted me to live, for I can conceive of no higher destiny for a man than always to have been faithful to the ideal image of him that lives forever in a loving mother's heart—the heart that outweighs the universe."

RESTRICTING

The Use of Automobiles By Undergraduates.

As many of us have learned from the newspapers, Dean Gauss, of Princeton, is striving to eliminate the automobile from university life. Other colleges have forbidden or restricted the use of cars for undergraduates.

The subject is discussed in an editorial in this week's Liberty, which explains: "Two men in our office fell into an argument as to whether college boys should have cars. One said the combination of car, college boy, prom girl and hooch means tragedy and that he would as lief give a baby a stick of dynamite to play with as to give his boy a car at college."

The other contended that colleges are designed to teach young men to live; a place where they prepare for the things they must do in life, and that learning to drive a car is part of modern life. He argued that a combination of booze and car is the same, whether in or out of college; that sedate business men will do the same things college boys do if driving while drunk, and that college is a good place to learn it cannot be done in safety. Besides, he insinuated, if we are going to be killed in an auto accident, one dies happier while in college.

Intoxicating liquor was the cause of the collision of a machine with a tree on the Chillicothe pike Sunday evening, south of the corporation limits. C. B. Surls and A. L. MEMORY FUND FOR FAULKNER OVER THE TOP

Income to be Used to Make
Loans to Boys and Girls
Who Need Some Help.

Announcement has been made by A. E. McKee, associate editor of the Ohio State Journal, as chairman of the committee on ways and means of the Faulkner Memorial Fund association that the fund of $10,000 is complete. The amount was subscribed in honor of the memory of James W. Faulkner, veteran political editor of the Cincinnati Enquirer, who died three years ago. Announcement of the completion was made on the third anniversary of his funeral.

"Only one large contribution was made to this fund," said Mr. McKee, in telling of the work of the committee. "It came from Mr. E. B. McLean, of the Cincinnati Enquirer and Washington Post, who asked that he might be permitted to pay that tribute to the man who had been his friend and his father's friend and the friend of his grandfather."

More than 2,000 other persons contributed to the fund in smaller amounts.

"As showing the wide range of Jim Faulkner's friendships, a contribution came from a distinguished journalist of London, from scores of veteran newspaper men thruout the United States, even one from Australia."

"Many contributions came from the lowly. A colored messenger in a department at Washington sent a dollar and wrote a beautiful letter of appreciation of the friendship Mr. Faulkner had shown him when he lived in Ohio. Six colored boys employed in the state house in Columbus pooled their gifts and six twenty-five cent pieces were turned into the treasury. The boys asked if this would be taken because Mr. Faulkner had always been their friend."

"A good woman in a small village far from Columbus sent $5. She had never known Mr. Faulkner, but said he was her brother's friend and she sent the contribution on the anniversary of her brother's death."

"In various places the contributions totalled odd amounts. At one place a five-cent contribution was made, the giver wanting to share in the fund, however small the gift might be. Every gift offered was accepted. This money was raised without a drive, without a word of urging, the committees objecting to all high-pressure methods."

"It wanted many givers, but wanted more to know that every gift was voluntary and came as an offering on the altar of a valued friendship. Probably no fund in the history of the state has ever been more redolent with the fine flavor of human love."

The Faulkner Memorial association will be incorporated. The money will be invested and the income will be used to make loans to boys and girls who need help in completing their education, preferably where they expect to engage in newspaper work. The loans will be repaid after graduation and establishment in life.

Among schools where these loans will be made is Miami university at Oxford. That institution conferred the honorary degree of Doctor of Letters upon Mr. Faulkner, a few years before his death.

As far as can be learned, this is the first memorial ever established to a newspaper reporter. The plan of loans is in harmony with the ideas of Mr. Faulkner, who always was willing to help one who had shown courage and skill.

The general committee in charge of the fund was composed of members of the Ohio Legislative Correspondents' association and also former members. The committee on permanent organization is composed of John T. Bourke, Cleveland; J. H. Galbraith, Columbus; former Governor James M. Cox, Dayton; Claude Meeker and E. E. Cook, of Columbus.

The committee announced that the fund is not closed and that all contributions offered will be accepted.

NAVY AVIATOR BYRD'S FEAT THRILLS AIRPLANE PEOPLE

What Took Perry 8 Months To Accomplish Was Done By Lieutenant Commander Byrd In Less than a Day—Entire Population of Kings Bay, Island of Spitzbergen, Turns Out To Greet the Returning Hero—News Received With Amazement In Navy and Army Circles At Washington.

Lieutenant Commander Richard E. Byrd, U. S. navy aviator, flew over the North Pole Sunday, the New York Times and the St. Louis Post-Dispatch announced.

Commanded Byrd, first to accomplish this feat, made the flight in 15 hours and 30 minutes, leaving his base at Kings Bay, Spitzbergen, at 12:50 o'clock Sunday morning (Greenwich time) returning safely at 4:20 o'clock Sunday afternoon.

Commander Byrd, in flying to the North Pole demonstrated that wings could do in less than a day what Admiral Peary, discoverer of the North Pole, consumed eight months in negotiating by dog sled. This also made Byrd's the first of nine expeditions attempting the feat to reach the North Pole this year.

His giant three-motored airplane carried him safely over wastes which Amundsen last year pronounced unsafe for airplane fighters and the distance traveled, roughly 1600 miles, was equal to more than a month's musing in the Arctic under the most ideal conditions for dog teams.

The flight and return of Commander Byrd, recounted by wireless, were far different both in the act and the transmission of news from the departure of Admiral Robert E. Peary from Sydney, N. S., July 7, 1908.

Peary hardly had cleared the harbor and was just beginning to fight some of the worst of the Atlantic ocean's storms in the little schooner Roosevelt in the time Byrd went to and returned from the pole.

The report that Byrd, who last year accompanied McMillan into the north, actually had reached the pole before returning to his base was received with amazement, as the announced plans for his first flight called only for negotiating the 400 miles to Pearyland and return, a total of 800 miles.

This in itself was considered a daring feat because of the paucity of landing places on the jagged Arctic ice plains, but the flight of at least 1600 miles involved in a round trip hop to the pole rivalled the most optimistic hopes of observers of this flight.

In four months after setting out, Peary had only reached Etah, Greenland, and there still remained a dash of hundreds of miles to the pole.

During the following months, until June of 1909, no word was received concerning Peary, except here and there a multitude of rumors.

Captain Roald Amundsen, who last year failed to reach the Pole with two airplanes, in 1913 made an unsuccessful attempt to reach the Pole by schooner and dog sled, but in a small schooner negotiated the northernmost shore of the American continent.

When Amundsen dashed into the North last year, however, he and Lincoln Ellsworth, backer and partner in the expedition, ended by experiencing both the thrill of flight into the North and the troubles of ice travel.

With their planes stuck fast in the ice, they were out of touch with their base for four weeks while they laboriously trekked back, finally encountering a fishing boat which returned them to the same base as the one for the successful hop Sunday.

The first attempts to reach the Pole

were made exclusively with ships, explorers being afraid to venture from this protection onto the snow. John Ross, an Englishman, was the first to adopt the sled, when, in 1818, he made an attempt foredoomed to failure, pulling his sled behind him.

McClintock in 1857 inaugurated the use of dogs and some years later the light sled was developed. Then for more than half a century the means of transportation in the Arctic circle remained stationary. The next step was the airplane.

Hundreds of men since have ventured in the region mapping it, searching for new, some times fabulous lands, while others have gone purely for the love of adventure. Many have paid with their lives.

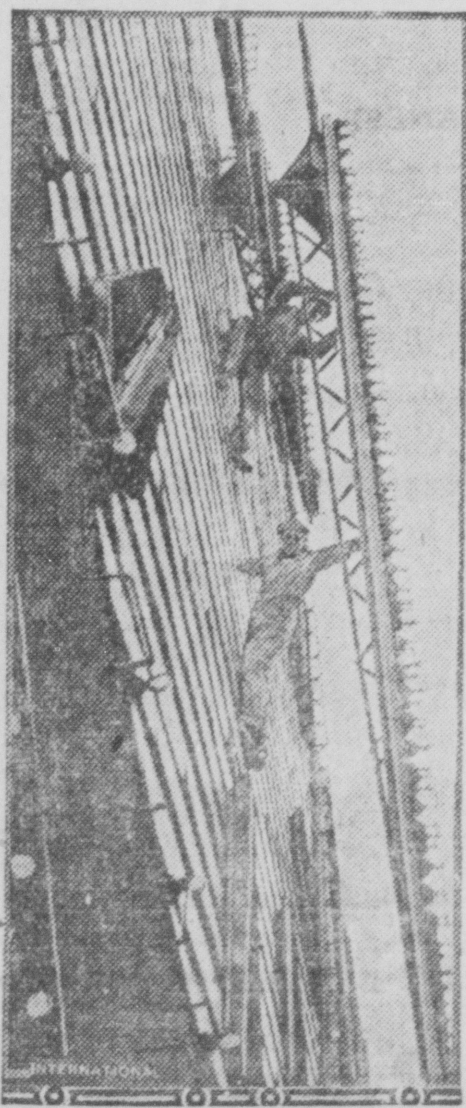

The skeletons of four men found on Herald Island in 1924, formed the grim record of a detachment of Stefansson's exploration party lost ten years before.

Rasmussen, who went by dog sled into the Arctic regions, traveled 20,000 miles before he emerged at Seattle in 1924, and with him he brought the first records to prove that Eskimos all speak the same language.

The child was saved by a government dam employee, who also made an unsuccessful effort to pull Wolff from the path of the train.

JENKINS BILL PASSED SENATE IS NOW A LAW

Will Insure the Continuation of the C. & O. Railroad Thru Circleville.

The United States senate on April 26, passed house resolution 7470 which is a bill introduced by Congressman Jenkins, of Ohio, authorizing the war department to enter into negotiations with the New York, Chicago and St. Louis Railroad company for a right of way thru the government land at Camp Sherman. The bill was signed by President Coolidge Thursday.

The passage of this bill will insure the continuation of the C. & O. Northern from Waverly to Columbus. It is understood that the work of constructing this railroad has been held up pending the passage of this bill. The C. & O. Northern has heretofore been using the tracks of the N. & W. railroad to Columbus, but the great increase of traffic on both of these roads has become so heavy that the construction of a new line is necessary.

It is understood that this construction work will start immediately as rights of way have been tentatively procured for the greater proportion of this proposed route. This construction will probably mean an expenditure of several million dollars in the Scioto Valley territory and will put another railroad line on the tax duplicate in Ohio. This road will give the C. & O. a direct line into Columbus and will, no doubt, tend to increase the railroad business at Russell, Kentucky, which already has one of the largest railroad yards in the world.

WITHDRAWAL OF AKRON MAN RAISES QUERY

Wiseacres Believe That Thad H. Brown Will be Gainer by Knight's Action.

It seems to be the consensus of opinion among politicians that the withdrawal of former Congressman Charles L. Knight from the contest for the Republican nomination for governor will benefit Colonel Thad H. Brown more than any other candidate. Knight did not attempt to bequeath his support to Brown or any other candidate; in fact, he did not assume to have any support that was his to transfer as he saw fit. Manifestly, the Republicans who intended to support Knight for the nomination will use their own judgment in selecting a candidate to take his place.

Colonel Brown has maintained friendly relations with all the rival candidates for the honor, and this has left him prepared to take advantage of such retirements from the contest as those of Colonel Carmi A. Thompson and Knight. For this reason, and this only, it is expected that there will be a general transfer of allegiance from the standard of the retired Knight to that of the secretary of state.

It will be interesting to note the attitude of the Republican leaders of Hamilton county since Knight is out of the running. The Times-Star, which is to say, Charles P. Taft, led off in boosting Knight's candidacy several months ago—going the limit, and much farther than was its custom—in urging his candidacy. This came as a decided surprise since no action regarding the nomination for governor had been taken by the party organization of Hamilton county, and it was suspected that the sentiment of the organization leader, Hynica, because of severe castigation at the hands of Knight, would not be favorable to him.

No pronouncement from the Hamilton county organization had been made when Knight announced his retirement from the primary contest. It was known, however, that Hynica was not personally favorable to the candidacy of Knight and yet he was not convinced that the Cincinnati candidate, Mr. Cooper, would give hope of success to the party. This, because as he put it, Mr. Cooper was too dry for Cincinnati, and if he should come before the people as the candidate of the Hamilton county organization, he would be looked upon askance by the party in other parts of the state—even among those who approved in Mr. Cooper the very things that weakened him with his own neighbors.

The question now is, what will the attitude of the Cincinnati organization be? Will the Times-Star still withhold support from Mr. Cooper? Will the organization go into the primary campaign without a favored candidate? Will it give a prefatory indorsement to Cooper, or will it cut loose and indorse a candidate who more nearly meets the requirements.—Columbus Dispatch.

VICTIM OF HANGING

Is Believed To Be Long Missing Man.

Cadiz, May 7.—An unidentified man found hanging from a tree in a dense woods on the Samuel Dunlap farm near Cassville, yesterday, may be Clark C. Baker, missing Mansfield dance hall proprietor.

The man had killed himself. He had thrown a piece of window cord over a limb and stepped off a stone. His toes were touching the ground when the body was found by Francis Dunlap, aged 10. The Dunlaps said they last saw the man walking along the road by their farm April 27.

The man's handkerchief found in his coat pocket bore either the initials "C. C. B." or "C. C. S.," the last letter being indistinct. His description tallies with that of Baker, according to a comparison made at Mansfield.

No one remembers seeing the man around the neighborhood before. It is not believed he was here for any length of time.

PICKAWAY COUNTY

Joined State Movement In Relief of Crippled Children.

Pickaway County, joining with the rest of the state, is making an attempt to give more than twelve thousand crippled children a real chance in life.

School enumerators now are taking the annual census of all school children in the state. They also want the names and addresses of all crippled children between the ages of one and twenty-one years.

It has been demonstrated that many of these children can be helped. Often crooked arms and legs can be straightened and the child can be made to run and play like other children. Special education also makes it possible for them to grow up into useful men and women who make their own way in life.

Ohio has means by which these children can be helped whether their parents are able to pay the cost of treatment and education or not. But it is necessary that they be found before aid can be given.

A Friend from the South Seas

Long before the South Seas became popularized through modern fiction and drama, their islands were making a valuable contribution to the American table. For the pineapple is grown in almost every tropical and semi-tropical country, and in Hawaii, in particular, where it is canned in great quantities and sent to the United States.

Very little raw pineapple is shipped, because, when fully ripe, it cannot be transported any great distance without damage, and when plucked before maturity, it lacks flavor. But doubtless the chief reason is the convenience of the canned product, since the raw pineapple is the hardest of all fruits to prepare for the table.

The food value of the pineapple lies in its vitamin, mineral and sugar content. Its refreshing flavor is incomparable. Physicians recommend it lightly for the throat. For the table it is used as a fruit, as a salad (either shredded or sliced), in fritters, as a filling for pie, cake or sandwiches, in puddings, ice cream and sherbet. It even adds a fine flavor to a slice of ham, when used as follows:

Star quickly in frying pan a thick slice of ham. Put into casserole and sprinkle with 1 tablespoon sugar and 1/4 t. brown sugar. Cover with juice from can of sliced pineapple, and surround with sliced slices of ham. Bake in hot oven until brown. Mix 2 tablespoons deep with a little cold water and add various spices. Remove ham and add flour mixture to gravy. Return ham to dish, garnish with pineapple and cream.

Either Twin Can Drive This Buick

One of these young ladies is driving an automobile for the first time in her life.

She is Daisy Hilton, one of the famous Texas Twins. She and her sister Violet have been joined together since birth at the base of the spine. Because Daisy is the right hand twin, she has always had to sit in the passenger's seat while Violet piloted the car. But in a recent visit to California the Howard Automobile Company, Buick distributors, solved the problem. The Buick used by the Twins has double control, and is used to teach new drivers how to handle a car. Violet is seen giving Daisy her first lesson in driving at the wheels of the double control Buick. These charming young girls are high school graduates, talented musicians and accomplished entertainers.

x HARTMAN THEATER. x x x x x x x x x x

"Under Cover," a mystery drama by Roi Cooper Megrue, author of the well known farce, "It Pays to Advertise," has been chosen as this week's offering by the Hartman Stock company under the direction of John Hayden. "Under Cover" enjoyed a long run when it was first produced in the Cort theater, New York, with William Courtenay in the leading role.

It has action aplenty, with thrill after thrill until the final curtain. Primarily the story has to do with the U. S. custom officers attempt to run down certain expert diamond smugglers. Amy Cartwright has foolishly sold her sister Ethel's diamonds to satisfy a gambling debt, and has collected their value from a burglary insurance company. With this information in his power, Daniel Taylor, a deputy in the customs, force the refined and innocent Ethel, against her inclination, to enter the custom service as a spy to "get the goods" on Steven Denby, a young society man whom she has met in Paris and fallen in love with, but who in reality has smuggled a valuable pearl necklace on his recent return from Europe.

The plot from then on has many astonishing twists and turns and it is not until the final curtain that the denouement comes and the entire plot unravels. Steven Denby is to be played by the popular leading man, Donn Cook, and his performance of this role promises to be a real delight. Jean Ford will play the part of Ethel, and others of the company will be in the supporting cast. "Under Cover" looks like a real thriller. Don't miss it!

Don't forget that dancing in the foyer to Allen Hale's orchestra starts thirty minutes before the play, during intermission and after each matinee, plays thirty minutes longer.

Matinees Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays.

LOANS UP TO $500.00.

At a public auction you buy an article at your own bid; and pay for it either in cash, at a small cash discount, or with a bankable note for the exact amount of your bid. There is never anything added into the fact of the note for a carrying charge—such a thing would not be tolerated.

Adding the carrying charge to the cost of anything you buy is simply a "clever" way of covering up excessive interest charges. And the rate you pay runs as high as 200 per cent depending entirely on the character of the firm you deal with.

You can avoid interest risks by borrowing money under the popular City Loan system. Here the interest accrues from day to day through the life of the loan, figured on a constantly diminishing balance. With City Loan money you can get the benefit of cash dealing, and pay moderate interest with the difference.

THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK

CIRCLEVILLE, OHIO

"The Bank That Makes You Feel At Home."

Canada To Honor An Ohioan.

The Dominion government is being urged to erect a monument to a native son of Ohio—Tecumseh, the Indian chief who was born near where Springfield now stands, in 1768. He was a valuable ally to the British in the War of 1812 and lost his life in the decisive land battle of that war on the Thames river, western Ontario, but his services have never been commemorated in spite of the fact that the Canadians have inherited the British penchant for so preserving the memory of their leaders—especially those who serve in their country's military or naval defenses.

The Toronto Globe in an editorial recently entitled "Remember Tecumseh," said: "His name is perpetuated in parks, hotels and other practical affairs, but the country which owes so much to his bravery and sagacity, has failed to erect something worthy, lasting and beautiful. Brantford has a statue of Joseph Brant, another Indian ally, but the chief who threw his forces behind Brock and the British in 1812 has been passed over."

It is suggested that the fact that the exact spot of the burial of Tecumseh is not known may have something to do with the delay in rendering merited honor to this old chief, but the Globe suggests that any spot on the site of the battle in which he was killed would be appropriate, in view of the fact that it now seems improbable that his exact burial place will ever be ascertained.

The Globe takes occasion while praising Tecumseh for his conduct at the Thames to criticize Proctor, the British commander, saying: "Proctor ran off and Tecumseh went along to help as he could. He died with his face to the foe while the general he derided was safely back of the lines and escaped to Ancestor after the defeat." Tecumseh is quoted as saying to Proctor at this turn of affairs: "We must compare our father's conduct to a fat dog that carries its tail on its back, but when affrighted drops it between its legs and runs off." It has been said that R. M. Johnson, who was vice president of the United States from 1837 to 1841, fired the shot that killed Tecumseh, but he himself did not claim to be certain of it. He fired at close range at an Indian that looked like him.—J. H. Galbraith in Columbus Dispatch.

THE SHIPPING BOARD'S VISIONS

The Shipping Board has just applied to Congress for an allowance of $15,000,000 to finance a line of eight ships between New York and Hamburg. The navy needs a merchant marine as material for conversion into transports in case of war. Granted. But so far as daily business is concerned, that is an academic argument. It need not be confused with the Fourth of July thesis that the American flag should be familiar on every sea, regardless of cost. Nevertheless, if the Shipping Board's business were frankly put before the public as the navy's business and its activities made to confirm to the navy's practical needs, the public might be induced to take a much more sympathetic interest.—New York Telegram.

Profitable Mistakes

One of the newest vogues is the result of a mistake. A big Paris designer made a coat for an American customer. By mistake it was delivered before the collar was added. The buyer was extremely pleased with the effect and the collarless vogue was the result.

To avoid unwelcome interruptions, John D. Rockefeller, Jr., often lunches alone in the woman's dining room of a downtown New York club. Few wives of the members journey as far as the Battery at noon, with the result that the younger Rockefeller many times has the room to himself.

AERIAL AMBULANCE FOUND OF VALUE

The aerial ambulance for the sick and wounded has made great progress in Sweden. There are vast districts in that country with comparatively large populations which are totally deprived of means of locomotion during part of the year. In winter the roads are obstructed by snowdrifts, and in summer many villages may be isolated by floods caused by the melting snows. In these circumstances it was decided to make a trial of aerial transport, and the government in 1923 agreed to share the expense of purchase of an airplane with the Swedish Red Cross.

A Breguet biplane was chosen, with a 300-horse power, 12-cylinder, water-cooled Renault engine, capable of carrying two stretcher cases with one attendant. Wheels were impracticable and were replaced by skis, and a pair of floats were added to facilitate landing on water. Military airmen piloted the machine and the service began in December, 1924.

During the winter 11 patients were transported. One patient, suffering from hemorrhage and living in a very isolated district, was transferred to Boden in an hour and a half, whereas the journey by sledge would have taken 20 hours, thus gaining many valuable hours.

The Guillotine

It is 112 years since the death of Dr. Ignatius Joseph Guillotine, who invented the instrument for beheading persons at one stroke, causing instant and painless death.

It was adopted by the French assembly in 1792, and within a month set up. The first person executed by it was a highway robber named Pelletier. The first political victim was Dangeumont, who was executed in August, 1792.

FORD ENGINE ENDURES TEST OF LONG RUN

Seventeen Days Under Heavy Pressure and Constant Adverse Conditions.

In the course of a test in Detroit recently for a certain eteel formula for use in the engine the Ford Motor company developed some interesting data along another line. The engine under test was run with wide open throttle and three times normal load, the equivalent of a non-stop endurance run half way around the world.

With the exception of one part, which was experimental, the engine was stock. The object of the test was to wear out the experimental part, and conditions were made difficult in order to get an early result. Cooling was purposely retarded, so that the radiator at all times registered a boiling temperature and the exhaust pipes were constantly red hot.

The test endured seventeen days, while engineers waited for the engine to fail. Adverse conditions were constant; oil was changed while the motor was running; speed was unvaried from thirty-six miles per hour and the overload was constant. At the end of 412 hours the engine was stopped and taken down.

Examination showed that the experimental part had been burned by the intense heat. But, aside from this, the engine was practically unaffected by the test and apparently ready to repeat it.

During the test the engine ran the equivalent of 14,382 miles, consuming 795 gallons of gasoline—an average of 18½ miles to the gallon, in spite of overload and excessive heat. Each piston moved up and down in its cylinder approximately 37,080,000 times and the crankshaft made an equal number of complete revolutions.

MRS. CAPPER PASSED AWAY IN HOSPITAL

Baltimore, Md., May 10, (UP)—Mrs. Arthur Capper, wife of U. S. Senator Capper, of Kansas, died early today at the hospital for the Women of Maryland.

Mrs. Capper five weeks ago underwent a major operation. For a while her condition improved, but several days ago a change occurred and it was apparent she would not survive.

Senator Capper, who had engaged a room at the hospital with other members of her family, was at her bedside at the end.

The body will be shipped to Topeka, Kansas, leaving Baltimore at 6:05 p. m., on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad. Accompanying the remains will be Senator Capper, Mrs. George M. Crawford, her sister-in-law, and Mrs. Crawford's two children, Mrs. Isabella Paxton and Marshall Crawford.

CINCINNATIAN IS MENTIONED FOR GOVERNOR

Robert Taft Declines to be Candidate and Judge Cushing is Considered.

New names were brought into the Republican governorship situation, as suggestions that had been advanced were abandoned.

Representative Robert A. Taft, of Hamilton county, followed Judge Harvey C. Smith, of Columbus, and Judge George H. Clark, of Canton, in refusing to become the choice of the group that backed Charles L. Knight, of Akron.

The most prominent name to appear in the arena was that of Judge Wade Cushing, of Cincinnati, whose friends importuned him to enter the contest. Judge Cushing was indifferent to the suggestions and doubt was expressed whether or not he would take the proffered support.

The other new name projected into the field was that of Joseph T. Tracy, Portsmouth, auditor of the state of Ohio. Since Tracy observed how A. V. Donahey crossed from the northwestern quarter of the Capitol he, too, has itching to essay the leap.

In a statement issued from his office it was stated that "recent political developments have caused numerous inquiries at the office relative to the possible candidacy of Mr. Tracy for governor. Continuing, the communique said that Mr. Tracy was absent from the city. It concluded:

"In a long distance telephone communication, however, he was told of the keen interest with which his decision is awaited. He advised that he was giving the matter consideration and would declare his intention as soon as possible after his return from Washington."

The legion which is striving for the Republican nomination for lieutenant governor was augmented by the addition of Isaac Lewis, of Canton, member of a family of former labor leaders. It was said that Lewis may run on the popularity of Lieutenant Governor Charles H. Lewis, who ran away with the prize two years ago.

The only contribution to the Democratic factional affairs was a letter made public Thursday by A. P. Sandles, of Ottawa, continuing the policy of nagging and "ragging" the present administration. Fault is found with the use of Ohio State Reformatory prisoners from Mansfield as attendants. Complaint was lodged with the Ohio League of Women Voters. Sandles suggested the league adopt a resolution asking that civilians replace the prisoners.

SOBER SLEEP THE DEEPEST IS THE CLAIM

Recording Machine Used in Experiment Broken by an Intoxicated Subject.

The eight hours of sleep which the human being allows to himself each night is a series of eleven-minute catnaps, psychologists were told by Professor Johnson, of the Mellon Institute, Pittsburgh. He presented findings of experiments made with sleeping persons whose rest was recorded by apparatus attached to a hanging bed on which the subjects slumbered.

The average rest period of the subjects was 11½ minutes. After that length of time the sleeper fidgeted, rolled over, changed his position and relaxed for 11½ minutes more.

An intoxicated man put to bed in the experimental divan tossed about so vigorously that he fractured the recording device, but after four hours he grew quieter and slept with reasonable normality. There is apparently no foundation, the experiments indicated, for the belief that intoxication produces a deeper, quieter sleep than normal slumber.

The psychologists, representing midwestern universities also had dissected for them psychologically the factors in the success of "Red" Grange at half back.

C. R. Griffith, of the psychology department of the University of Illinois reviewed experiments with athletes at the university, which proved, he said that no small part of athletic prowess was within the mind. Psychological treatment he declared, enabled men to build up muscular processes which they could not be coached to achieve.

Analysis of Grange's prowess as an open field runner in football revealed Griffith related, that the galloping ghost of the gridiron never run for an opening. He has an unusual knack of envisioning the whole field rather than the immediate possibilities of gain, and he saw his opening in the process of creation rather than dashing madly for a hole which would be plugged by the time he hit it.

OHIO FARMERS PROTECTED IN BUYING SEEDS

New Law Provides For the Staining of Imported Clover and Alfalfa.

Farmers of Ohio will soon be able to buy clover and alfalfa seed and feel fairly sure they are getting good seed that will grow. This is brought about by the passage of the Gooding-Ketchum seed bill which was signed by the president last week.

For many years, Ohio farm leaders say, clover and alfalfa seed has been brought into this country from Europe which is unadapted and will not grow under climatic conditions here. Large quantities of this seed have been mixed with home grown stocks so that the yield of apparently adapted seed has been cut materially.

The bill as finally passed, provides that all imported alfalfa and red clover seeds must be dyed a distinctive color to show point of origin in such manner and to such extent as the secretary of agriculture may prescribe. The bill, which was backed by farm bureaus, granges and crop experts, becomes law in thirty days.

Few farmers realize what a large amount of seed is affected by the new law. Figures secured by the Ohio Farm Bureau federation show that during the first fifteen days of this year only 3,144,000 pounds of red clover seed, most of it unadapted to Ohio use, was imported. During December, 1925, importations totalled 4,400,000 pounds.

Staining of the weed, backers of the bill believe, will prevent mixing of home grown and adapted seed with cheaper imported stocks which do not give satisfactory results in the northern part of this country.

Palestine's Big Fair

The mid-east fair, held with much success in the city of Tel Aviv, Palestine, last year, was reopened in Tel Aviv by the British high commissioner on March 26, 1926. The newly-established Palestine industries are reported to be making an effort to have their goods well represented and, according to local reports, special interest is being shown in the fact that the first planos manufactured in Palestine are exhibited.

Laughs at Advancing Age

Despite her eighty-six years, there is no more enthusiastic lover of outdoor sports than Mrs. Olive Tobey of Eliot, Maine, and it is not an uncommon sight to see her and her daughter and granddaughters coasting on a double-runner bob sled. Mrs. Tobey apparently gets more enjoyment out of this than do the younger members of the group.—Boston Globe.

Heroism of Women

It is a part of the heroism of women to believe and suffer rather than to reason. Their instinct gives them their view of truth; they make fewer demands upon the conscious reason. AMUSEMENTS

Tom Meighan's a New York traffic cop at the Met theater in the Paramount picture, "Irish Luck," a screen version of the Saturday Evening Post story, "An Imperfect Impostor," by Norman Venner.

The story is an unusually pleasing romantic drama laid against a background of modern Dublin, the Lakes of Killarney and New York City, with several eye-filling shots taken aboard the S. S. Leviathan.

As Tom Donahue, New York policeman, the star wins a trip to Europe in a newspaper popularity contest. Aboard ship on the way over he is mistaken for a young Irish nobleman by a young man and woman. When they discover their error they stick around, nevertheless, and finally fleece Tom out of his prize money.

He lands in Dublin with only a dollar between him and starvation, catches a glimpse of the two crooks and trails them to the race track where a "bookie" again takes him for Lord Fitzhugh, places the nobleman's usual bet on his favorite horse for him and Tom departs with 5,000 pounds won in Fitzhugh's name. He looks up the other man (also played by Meighan) to tell him about the case of mistaken identity, is cordially received and invited to spend the night at Fitzhugh's apartment.

In the morning he is awakened by a beautiful young woman, Lady Gwendolyn (Miss Wilson) who mistakes him at first for her brother, Lord Fitzhugh. The girl has come to bring her brother to the bedside of their uncle who wants to see his nephew again, wipe out an old estrangement and remember him in his will. During the night Fitzhugh has been abducted by a gang of conspirators and is held prisoner in a lonely cottage. It is Tom Donahue, traffic cop, that Lady Gwendolyn brings to her uncle.

Douglas, another nephew, has bribed the conspirators with an offer of 1,000 pounds to murder Fitzhugh, and the deed is planned for the night when the will is to be read on the castle. He also plans to arrest Tom, as soon as he signs the papers, as a forger and an impostor.

But the New York cop has a trick or two up his sleeve. He crawls thru the window of the cottage, sends the real Fitzhugh back to the castle to deal with Douglas, and when the conspirators come to murder him, he shows how a New York policeman fights when his back is against the wall.

If you think you'd like Tom Meighan in the land of romance and chivalry, enacting the role of a real red blooded, two fisted Irish-American here, don't miss Irish Luck." Victor Heerman directed. Tom Geraghty wrote the scenario.

Recalling Memories of Fauntleroy Craze

In his book, "The Turn of the Century, 1900-1904," Mark Sullivan cites a recent interview with Wallace Edginger, who was one of the three child originators of the title role in "Little Lord Fauntleroy," by Frances Hodgson Burnett. Mr. Edginger said: "The role was originated by three of us. * * * We all rehearsed it about the same time and we all played it at the Broadway theater in New York. I was only seven when I began the Little Lord Fauntleroy part. I played it all over the United States. Maine to California, and received as high as $250 a week. * * * To play the part, I had to have long golden curls. In addition I had to wear white cuffs and be, oh, so sweet, on the stage. As a result, the other boys used to call me "Sissy." After a while a boy seldom got beyond the first part of the word before I slammed him in the nose. There were other kids who were glad when the "Fauntleroy" vogue died, too. Their mothers were dressing them as counterparts of me in the role, and they were always getting into fights."

A Paradox

"It may seem paradoxical," said the librarian at an East side branch library, "but I find that the people who have the deepest appreciation of literature almost invariably are those who keep their library books beyond the allotted time. It isn't that they do not read the books, but rather that they read them quickly, and perhaps buy others or borrow others, forgetting the books which should have been returned to the library."—Detroit News.

Black Satin Is Used for This Spring Suit

This smart suit for the cool spring days is of black satin, with a high collar and a jabot of ecru lace. The hat is of black felt, with a band of red and a crystal ornament at the side.

Chic of Simplicity IsFound in Chiffon Garb

Those who have spent the winter months at the smart Florida resorts with one accord give precedence to the simple little frock of chiffon for informal evening wear. This frock is of such utter simplicity of line that it would be almost naive were it not for the skill and cleverness with which an intricate manipulation of fabric produces an effect of youthful and charming grace.

For all their simplicity, however, it takes a person of distinction and a certain amount of sophistication to wear them. There is a trick in achieving simplicity that only those initiated in all the varying ways of fashion can accomplish with any degree of success. Once achieved, nothing gives the effect of greater chic, which perhaps is the reason that year after year the great designers and those who interpret their modes to the world at large practice as well as preach the gospel of simplicity.

An outstanding phase in connection with the simple chiffon evening frock is the use of delicate flowerlike colorings in contrast to the vivid shades of other seasons.

Printed Silk for Coat, Plain Fabric for Dress

So beautiful are the new silks and in many ways so different in design and colorings from the materials of other years, that it is not surprising to find them put to uses never thought of heretofore.

In the ensemble of other seasons when a plain and patterned silk were combined, the figured material appeared as a lining of the coat which matched the frock. This year one finds this order reversed. Printed silks now fashion the coat itself and a plain-surfaced fabric is chosen for the dress. The result is very effective and amazingly chic.

The most strikingly individual of the new silks reflect a feeling for elusive tones on the order of pastel shades, but even more subdued and delicate in tone, and the same feeling for delicacy and unobtrusive charm is evident in the designs, many of which are floral in effect but much conventionalized.

Colors in Demand for New Shoes and Hosiery

Fashion dictators are at variance when it comes to stockings. Shall the dark or light colors be proclaimed as fashionable is the question. In the meantime each woman seems to be settling the question for herself.

In the shops they say there is a tremendous demand for shoes in black, mauve, taupe and cannon shades. Those in gunmetal with black heels are also great favorites. On the other hand, there is no end to the light colors. New tones are continually appearing, and the moonlight, woodland rose, nude, the antelope series and all the others, too numerous to mention, are very much in demand.

With the colors that are appearing in the new shoes and the desire of good dressers that the footwear match or harmonize with the costume, it is fortunate there is such a wide range of colors to select from.

Black and Brilliants

Black for evening is the latest word from Paris and black chiffon dance frocks are worn by the smartest women. One frock is covered with glittering brilliants so attached as to give the effect of a pattern. There is no other decoration.

Never Before

A speeding motorist had been hauled up before a southern Indiana justice of the peace. The motorist evidently thought it was a trumped-up charge with a fine as the reward for the local department of justice, and his conduct before the justice bore this out.

"Were you ever in a court of justice before?" the squire asked him, to impress him with the gravity of his situation.

"No, never," was the retort, "but I've been before a justice of the peace before."

A Nude Horse

Dorothy and Sally, age five and three, were visiting their grandparents in a southern Indiana town. One morning they had been out playing when they suddenly burst into the house very much excited and frightened. Being asked the reason for their hurried entrance, Dorothy gasped out: "Oh, there was a horse went running down the street and nobody was with it. And it didn't have a thing on, not even a strap—nothing but just its skin and its tail."

MOTHERS' DAY ADDRESS BY SECRETARY OF LABOR DAVIS

A Mother Is the "Holiest Thing Alive" and Her Heart "Outweighs the Universe"—Our Indebtedness To Woman Is Too Large For Measurement By Means of Any Conventional Yardstick or Scales—Makes Vigorous Defense of the Girls of Today and Says They Will Give a Good Account of Themselves.

The following address was delivered Sunday afternoon in Arlington cemetery, Washington D. C., by Secretary of Labor James J. Davis, and under the auspices of the American War Mothers' association:

There is an ancient Oriental proverb which tells us that the heart of a mother outweighs the universe. It does. As I stand here today in Arlington cemetery, on ground sacred to the memory of our honored dead, there comes to my mind the words which you will find in the ninth verse of the thirty-seventh chapter of the book of Ezekiel: "Thus saith the Lord God; come from the four winds, O, breath, and breathe upon these slain, that they may live." That breath has come; it has caressed all these heroes born of woman, nurtured by a mother's love and inspired by the ideal of a heart that outweighs the universe. They live again in our minds and hearts and in the strength of our nation.

The spiritual always dominates in the long years the mind of man. Love is as all-embracing as the sea. One of the greatest poets has said that it is love that moves the sun and all the stars; we know that it is love that moves our human world. And the heart of a mother is love in its purest form.

I am not speaking in terms of sentiment only. Henry Drummond pointed out more than thirty years ago that every living thing in the world, vegetable no less than animal, came in response to love, and he depicted man as living on the fruits of love when he consumed his corn and wine. The ancient civilizations of Greece and Rome thought of the earth as a mother who brought all forms of life into existence, and it was a beautiful and poetic thought.

What the world owes to woman, and especially to woman as mother, would require more than a brief address to tell. It would need many large volumes. We used to hear it said that this is a man's world, and if one had been compelled to believe all the intellectual folly that poured like a flood from the lips and pens of persons who were not otherwise, the inference would have been that woman had had so slight a share in the affairs of destiny as to be quite negligible. There are still some who continue to talk and write in that strain, but their number is growing beautifully less, and we may hope that in a not distant day the tribe will be extinct. The truth is that our indebtedness to woman is too large for measurement by means of any conventional yardstick or scales. We know now that women were the first tillers of the soil. In the twilight period of human history, while the men of the tribe went forth to war, or to hunt and fish, women sowed the seeds that were to ripen into grain. They nurtured the children; they did all the labor that their men regarded as menial and beneath their dignity. They inspired the warrior to battle with his foes, and they cared for him tenderly if he returned maimed from the conflict. Those who speak so scornfully of woman's activities in the past would do well to remember that if woman had not consented to go down into the valley of the shadow of death, if necessary, to produce offspring, there would have been no human history at all. There would not even have been one man to sit in the seats of the scornful, able to tell his mother that, in comparison with him, she was of very slight account.

There is in the world nothing finer than the spirit of heroism; and there is not a man on earth who does not owe every atom of heroism that he may possess to the woman who bore him. No matter what physical or moral courage he may have displayed, or may later display, he has inherited that spiritual wealth from a woman who dared to risk her life that he might be brought into the world. Even more than this can be said. Those who affect to despise the work of women, those who say that the earth has never been a great feminine mind in the ranks of science, philosophy or polite literature should bear in mind that, even if they were right, it would still be true that every great masculine scientist, thinker and writer has learned that the mother is no less essential. The mother can supply the heart—the heart which the proverb says outweighs the universe—in meeting those problems that involve children, those in want, and those whose sick minds predispose them to a life of crime, and the heart is likely to accomplish more in these directions during the future than the head of man has been able to accomplish for a period of ten thousand years.

Those who opposed woman suffrage most bitterly only a few years ago are now often the loudest in their praise of what women have already done in the affairs of state; and we may be certain that this praise will swell in volume as the years and the centuries roll on.

There are heard at present, however, pessimistic voices which agree with all that has been said in regard to the motherhood of the past, but are gloom incarnate when they speak of the future. They tell us that we have entered into what they call an Age of Jazz; of the flapper they speak only in terms of reproach, or even horror. They do not admit that the flapper is the equivalent of the young woman of the past, and they depict her as shunning the responsibilities of marriage, as throwing all decorum to the winds and treading the various primrose paths that lead to individual and national disaster. Is there any truth in this pessimism?

My opinion is that the amount is not great. From time immemorial such complaints have ascended to the welkin. The old have always tended to be skeptical of the young. They have always been heard declaring that times are not what they used to be. "They never were," replies the wit. The truth is that nature is always much wiser than any grumbling pessimist or calamity howler, for nature is very old. A few years ago our pessimists saw all things blue, because women had shortened their skirts. They wanted women to be like their grandmothers and great-grandmothers of the early nineteenth century. Their wailing led some enterprising woman to study the fashions of that period, and lo! it was discovered that the short skirt of this day was exactly the kind of skirt that the extolled women of that period wore.

There is nothing wrong with the girls of today. Of course, some of them are quite frivolous. But there have been flappers for the past ten thousand years of whom the same thing might have been said, and indeed was said. If you have any doubt as to that, read the oldest literature of the world, and your doubt will be laid to rest.

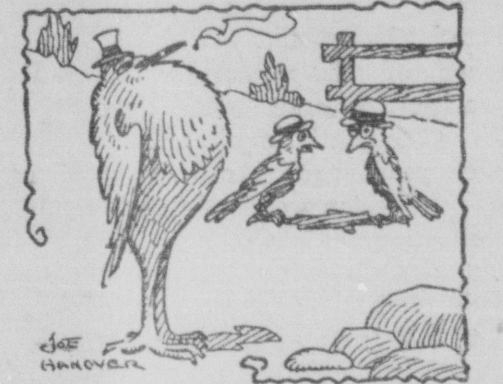

Edmund Burke begged his generation to bear in mind that because half a dozen grasshoppers under a fern made a field to ring with their chink, it did not follow that they were the only inhabitants of the field, for in that same field thousands of cattle chewed their cud silently in the shadow of the British oak. Thus might we speak of our noisy flappers, in comparison with the whole. They are few in number. The overwhelming majority of them are quite as sedate as were their mothers at the same age. Nor should it be assumed too hastily that the flappers whose escapades enliven the press columns are destined necessarily to shoot Niagara. Most of these will give a good account of themselves when the time arrives for them to take their places among the matrons. You must allow something for the spirit of youth.

We are living, all things considered, in the grandest age that America has known. People speak of juvenile delinquency, but the latest available statistics indicate that this delinquency is decreasing rather than increasing. All the evils from which we suffer are very old, but human nature is not going backward, but forward. All the gains of the past will be conserved, and the future will reach many goals that now are only to vision known. Let us learn to have faith in our country and mankind; above all, let us continue to have that faith in woman and motherhood that has always been one of our most cherished possessions.

These are a few of the thoughts that I would leave in your minds on this day, wisely dedicated to the memory of our mothers. I bear in mind my own, and shall never forget what she has meant in my life. I can still see her back in the old home doing uncomplainingly all the necessary drudgery of the household, and yet never failing in the tender care of her children. I can see her as she held the lamp for me in the darkness of the night when my youthful feet wended their way to the work of the mill. I recall all her acts of kindness, her wise admonitions, and her never-failing faith in days that were well adapted to try the soul. Do I need with such a mother, to tell you why this day means so much to me? She is still alive, and I have sent her these lines which I picked up in a shop: "This day by many set apart In honor of the mother heart,—I love the custom, for you see

The best of mothers God gave me." I believe with all my heart and soul that Coleridge spoke only sober truth when he said that a mother is "the holiest thing alive." That has been my experience, and I believe that it has been the experience of all men who have tried to do their duty. Men often ask one another, "What would you wish to have said of you in the end?" I have but one answer. I would like to have it said of me that I lived as my mother wanted me to live, for I can conceive of no higher destiny for a man than always to have been faithful to the ideal image of him that lives forever in a loving mother's heart—the heart that outweighs the universe."

RESTRICTING
The Use of Automobiles By Undergraduates.

As many of us have learned from the newspapers, Dean Gauss, of Princeton, is striving to eliminate the automobile from university life. Other colleges have forbidden or restricted the use of cars for undergraduates.

The subject is discussed in an editorial in this week's Liberty, which explains: "Two men in our office fell into an argument as to whether college boys should have cars. One said the combination of car, college boy, prom girl and hooch means tragedy and that he would as lief give a baby a stick of dynamite to play with as to give his boy a car at college.

"The other contended that colleges are designed to teach young men to live; a place where they prepare for the things they must do in life, and that learning to drive a car is part of modern life. He argued that a combination of booze and car is the same, whether er in or out of college; that sedate business men will do the same things college boys do if driving while drunk, and that college is a good place to learn it cannot be done in safety. Besides, he insinuated, if we are going to be killed in an auto accident, one dies happier while in college.

Waterproof Shoes
When polishing shoes in rainy weather put an extra amount of polish along the joint between the uppers and soles. This will make them waterproof and prevent mud from caking on the leather.

ILLEGAL POSSESSION.

Louis Youngman and Allen Fowler were placed under arrest Saturday evening, charged with having intoxicating liquor in their possession. In police court both were found guilty and each was handed a fine of $100 and costs, the latter amounting to $8.70. Being unable to pay they were sent to the county jail and will stand committed until fine and costs are paid.

Intoxicating liquor was the cause of the collision of a machine with a tree on the Chillicothe pike Sunday evening, south of the corporation limits. C. B. Surls and A. L. Southward, of Columbus, occupants of the car, were placed under arrest by Sheriff Young and his deputies, Irwin and Littleton. The two men were found guilty in a hearing before Judge Curtain and each was handed a fine of $200 and costs. Being unable to pay, the prisoners were handed over to Sheriff Young.

"Be good and you will be happy," is not an infallible rule. But "be honest and you will stand a better chance of succeeding" is a rule that every young man will do well to follow.

The amount was subscribed in honor of the memory of James W. Faulkner, veteran political editor of the Cincinnati Enquirer, who died three years ago. Announcement of the completion was made on the third anniversary of his funeral.

"Only one large contribution was made to this fund," said Mr. McKee, in telling of the work of the committee. "It came from Mr. E. B. McLean, of the Cincinnati Enquirer and Washington Post, who asked that he might be permitted to pay that tribute to the man who had been his friend and his father's friend and the friend of his grandfather."

More than 2,000 other persons contributed to the fund in smaller amounts.

"As showing the wide range of Jim Faulkner's friendships, a contribution came from a distinguished journalist of London, from scores of veteran newspaper men thruout the United States, even one from Australia."

"Many contributions came from the lowly. A colored messenger in a department at Washington sent a dollar and wrote a beautiful letter of appreciation of the friendship Mr. Faulkner had shown him when he lived in Ohio. Six colored boys employed in the state house in Columbus pooled their gifts and six twenty-five cent pieces were turned into the treasury. The boys asked if this would be taken because Mr. Faulkner had always been their friend."

"A good woman in a small village far from Columbus sent $5. She had never known Mr. Faulkner, but said he was her brother's friend and she sent the contribution on the anniversary of her brother's death."

"In various places the contributions totalled odd amounts. At one place a five-cent contribution was made, the giver wanting to share in the fund, however small the gift might be. Every gift offered was accepted. This money was raised without a drive, without a word of urging, the committees objecting to all high-pressure methods."

"It wanted many givers, but wanted more to know that every gift was voluntary and came as an offering on the altar of a valued friendship. Probably no fund in the history of the state has ever been more redolent with the fine flavor of human love."

The Faulkner Memorial association will be incorporated. The money will be invested and the income will be used to make loans to boys and girls who need help in completing their education, preferably where they expect to engage in newspaper work. The loans will be repaid after graduation and establishment in life.

Among schools where these loans will be made is Miami university at Oxford. That institution conferred the honorary degree of Doctor of Letters upon Mr. Faulkner, a few years before his death.

As far as can be learned, this is the first memorial ever established to a newspaper reporter. The plan of loans is in harmony with the ideas of Mr. Faulkner, who always was willing to help one who had shown courage and skill.

The general committee in charge of the fund was composed of members of the Ohio Legislative Correspondents' association and also former members. The committee on permanent organization is composed of John T. Bourke, Cleveland; J. H. Galbraith, Columbus; former Governor James M. Cox, Dayton; Claude Meeker and E. E. Cook, of Columbus.

The committee announced that the fund is not closed and that all contributions offered will be accepted.

Effective Bookbinding

Covering books with colorful bindings not only gives an added note of interest to the bookshelf but protects the books. Books can easily be bound with wall paper, cretonne, chintz and pieces of old brocaded silks. It is always advisable to either varnish or shellac the material used, to give it a nice as well as lasting finish.

Trees and Shrubs

Trees have single stems or trunks which branch out at some distance from the ground, while shrubs often have several stems and are of lower growth and bushy habit.
